

Paragraph & questions

In the summer I wrote my proposal and I wrote 3/4 of the story I wanted to film. After several chats with Simon I am back to scratch again. Simon told me I am standing on the edge of a cliff and now is the moment to jump off. He also spoke about the possibilities of not making a fiction film. When I came here my intention was to build my way to a career of filmmaking. Simon mentioned that I might become closer to my own voice, my own signature when I make for instance a documentary instead of drama. I shouldn't focus too much on making a fiction film. He then gave me the option to think about my biggest fears and try to turn these into my project.

Thus the past week I have been thinking a lot about my options. I want to make the jump, yet I like the story I wrote in the summer as well. Especially I like the style, so I might take this style into a new form or I have to start thinking about a complete new project were there might not even be a pre written story. I am now glancing over the possibilities. For instance, will I find my passion in something other than fiction film, because last year the project that I liked making most was my fiction film. If I make a documentary about my fears will I do this to please my tutors or will I make the piece I want to make. If I make a fiction film, will I make the project I want, will it be strong and personal or am I just to scared to jump off the cliff? This leads me to the following questions:

- Will I become happy when I work in an other field than fiction film or am I just to scared to work out of my conform zone?
- What are my biggest fears? Should these be personal in the sense (I'm afraid I am not as talented as I think I am) or personal in the sense (I am scared my parents will die)?
- Do I want to make a story about the death of my or others parents or about the non-acknowledged talent? Or am I forcing myself to adjust myself to please the tutors?
- What do you guys thought of the short story? Is or isn't strong enough as a graduation proposal?
